Ooga Booga Poems Frederick Seidel

A dual-review of 'Evening Man' and 'Ooga-Booga.' Yet more evidence that honest reportage from the disaffected has more critical force than puritanical censorship: it's impossible to read this and feel anything but disgust for Seidel, his world (i.e., the ultra-rich), and the world surrounding that world, in which everything is for sale, for the purposes of sex and hedonism.

January 2007 Olivia Cronk poetry Ooga Booga by Frederick Seidel "Winter is wearing summer but it wants to undress for you, Fred." On one hand, Frederick Seidel seems to be the Dominick Dunne of the poetry world -- teeming and oozing with celebustante status, dropping names, sucking on a pinkie finger over an espresso.

Frederick Seidel has been called “the poet the 20th century deserved” and lauded as one of “the best poets writing today”; he has also been accused of writing “sinister” and “disturbing” poetry. Ange Mlinko, in the Nation, described his work as employing “the prosody of atrocity.” Such divisive reactions have followed Seidel from the beginning: his first book, Final ...
